

Week 2 - Cranbury

GoTT,

Your results for the week that was at the Bog last week are in, and we have our first low rounds of the season to report (thank god). Cranbury has been berry berry good to the tour in recent years. Thanks to the pretend par 5 on the back that was added 2 seasons ago and a few guys took major advantage of the joint this week. It took 4 under par net 68 to podium this week but much more than that to win. LinkMe was the crazy low man this week (there almost always is one here isn't there). LinkMe shot 78 net 61 and I think that's a personal best round for him, cause I know he hasn't gone lower than that on tour. He lapped the field and from what I heard was back out shooting good golf already this week. LinkMe darts up the leader board into 4th place, but let's see if he plans on staying there.

Second place this week went to a very game Matt D who after missing the first week took full advantage of his opportunity in the second. Matt shot an 89 net 66 and suddenly is finding the 80's more than the 90's of his rookie campaign. Third place went to Mullet who also missed the first week of the season due to travel commitments (or so we think). Nice and neat this week, no ties at the top. Honorable mention however goes to Lance who made a strong bid for the podium only to fall one stroke short. A recurring story in Lancelot's long career on tour. Although he is another guy we could do with seeing more of out here for sure.

Unfortunately we cannot leave this space without acknowledging the blight that was the bottom of the board this week. Dos Equis, playing with an untenable 28 index until he gets a handicap put up the worst net round in YGS history this week, and its only marginally because of the number. The most interesting man in the world was for one week this tours most inept shooting a 131 net 101 in what had to have been a most painful round of golf. Not to be outdone by too much our man Scott L made a pretty good run at that number firing a 125 net 91 in the same 4-some as our winner and 3rd place finisher this week. Here's hoping some of that greatness spills over to your game next week brother.

All results below. I have included for the last time this week the names and nicknames of all players on tour in the standings below. Please remember these in the future when all results will be in nickname only form so TrooperD can more easily post to the website.

Lastly one correction from last weeks results. David McC did not in fact finish 3rd last week along with Eddie as I had forgotten to apply the hdcp limit to his result. this did not affect anyone else as Eddie had also been 3rd last week. All adjustments have been made to the standings below.

Good luck to all in week 3.
